SYNOPSIS

Teena Vallerine's home looks like a cottage out of a fairy tale with its paintwork picked out in blue and cream and its pointy gabled windows set in the red tiled roof and the whole nestling cosily under a thick blanket of Christmas snow at the end of a long, winding drive. And, once safely inside, the visitor is most likely to find the family in the kitchen so kitsch they actually named it The Kitschen, where Isaac, who's nine, loves to make Christmas cards while Teena bakes seasonal biscuits.
